Congressman Ely's Story.

Alfred Ely, the New York member of Congress, who has been a prisoner of war at Richmond since the Boll Run affair, and arrived at Washington on Friday, makes some interesting statements as to affairs in Richmond. The day before he left Richmond he visited Cols. Wood, Coggswell, and Lee. Major Revere, and Captains Boosmany, Keifer, and Rockwood, who are in close confinement in the common jail. He found them crowded into a room about twelve feet square without furniture saving one or two benches and a small table. Cots are brought in at night and all sleep in the small apartment. The walls are dilapidated and the floor is rich in rat holes. One of the captains remarked that it was a question with him as to who had possession of the room, as the rats claimed many arriveness and had on one occas. Wood, Coggswell, and Lee, Major Revere, and Cap-tains Boosmany, Keifer, and Rockwood, who remarked that it was a question with him as to who had possession of the room, as the rats claimed many privileges and had on one occa-sion, carried his pantaloons out of the door. Various kinds of vermin revel in the miserable cell, which is lighted by two small windows heavily barred with irons. Col. Wood has quite recovered from his severe wound, and the other officers are quite well. Mr. Ely is of opinion that they will certainly be hung, as well as Col. Corcoran, who is in close confinement at Charleston, if the pirates in our possession are put to death. Of Col. Corcoran's demenor while in teston, if the pirates in our possession are put to death. Of Col. Corcoran's demenor while in Richmond, Mr. Ely speaks in terms of hearty praise. That brave officer-never cowed under the most disheartening circumstances.

Just before his departure from Richmond, Gen. Winder sent for Mr. Ely and asked him to designate several officers to be released in exchange for those lately discharged from Fort Warren. He undertook the delicate office with exchange for those lately discharged from Fort Warren. He undertook the delicate office with a view to humanity, choosing those most likely to suffer from long confinement, and the fortunate selections, including Licuts. The first definite information Mr. Ely received of his release was by Mr. Faulkner, who called upon him on Friday afternoon. Subsequently Mr. Ely dined with them, and had a very agreeable intercourse. Mr. Ely was released on Saturday, and permitted to go anywhere in the city. He had several invitations to dinner, and was generally well treated. He left Richmond at 5 o'clork on Wednesday morning, and was taken to Petersburg, where a great prevalence to Colds, £c., and a cerativy of the efficiency of a medicine is required to avail Consumption and ultimate death. This remody, although only recently intreaded in this vicinity, has met with a great demand, and every confidence is placed in its merits by those who have given it a fair and impartial trial.
